Officials said 160 patients had to be evacuated from Brockton Hospital Tuesday.

A fire with 10 alarms, but no injuries

Evacuations went without issues

Brockton's fire chief has been marveling that no one was injured in Tuesday's 10-alarm fire at Brockton Hospital, which forced the evacuation of 160 patients.

"Every single patient had to be brought down the stairs," Brockton Fire Chief Brian F. Nardelli said in a phone interview with the Globe. "The fact no one was injured still blows my mind."

The fire started around 8 a.m. in a basement transformer room and power was immediately cut to the hospital and its standby generators, according to Signature Healthcare Brockton Hospital and city fire officials.

Rescuers couldn't use the elevators because they weren't operating due to the lack of power.

Nardelli said it was a "silver lining" that everyone was able to get out of the hospital safely and no one was hurt.

When the hospital will be able to reopen still remains to be seen.

Brockton Hospital officials instructed all staff, with the exception of security, to not report

BRIAN F. NARDELLI, Brockton fire chief to work for any shifts Wednesday, and all elective procedures scheduled to take place through Feb. 10 have been canceled, according to Signature Healthcare's Facebook page.

Nardelli did not specify how much damage resulted from the fire, but he said it was significant.

As of Wednesday morning, the cause of the fire was still under investigation, officials said.

The state fire marshal said the cause of the fire did not appear to be suspicious, according to Jake Wark, a spokesman for the state Department of Fire Services.

Wark said the investigation is open and is being jointly conducted by the Brockton Fire Department, the Brockton Police Department's Fire Investigation Unit, and State Police fire investigators assigned to the state fire marshal's office.

Patients were taken to Cape Cod Hospital, Falmouth Hospital, a hospital in Boston, and Good Samaritan Medical Center in Brockton, according to Brockton Mayor Robert Sullivan, who described the response as "a great collaboration" between local and state rescuers.

Relatives seeking information on where patients were transferred can call 617-370-5971.

In Easton, some ask how check on well-being ended in death

Authorities said Griffiths suffered from longstanding mental health issues and suicidal ideation. The officer who shot her was placed on paid administrative leave while the district attorney's office investigates the shooting.

At the time, many residents were at home and watched incident unfold through windows, including Marci Slovin, who was with her 14-year-old son.

At one point, Slovin took photos of a Rook, a tracked vehicle resembling a small bulldozer and equipped with a long arm, that she said police used to gain entry into the house.

"This is tragic all around," said Slovin, who lives across the street on Spooner Street. "It's very hard. ... I'm still trying to process it."

Negotiators made several attempts to speak with Griffiths by phone after the officer fired, Easton Police Chief Keith Boone said in a statement. Eventually, a regional SWAT team entered the home and found her dead, he said.

Officials have not said precisely when Griffiths was shot or when police found her dead.

Boone and Gregg Miliote, a spokesperson for the Bristol district attorney's office, have declined to comment on the fatal shooting, citing the ongoing investigation.

Easton police last responded to a call involving 32 Spooner St. in September, when a Braintree man reported that his mother had threatened to kill herself, according to a police log entry.

The man told police she had "access to many meds" she could potentially overdose on, the entry said, which the Globe obtained through a public records request.

"She stated she was going to kill herself and it would be the last time he saw her," he told police, the entry said.

Officers who responded to the house said that several people staying at the home said the man had been angry with his mother and that calling the police "might have been a form of retaliation," the report said.

At 32 Spooner St., a gray house with red shutters, chickens could be seen poking around.

Heavy vehicle tracks were visible in the yard, and the front door frame was twisted and bent. A man who came to the door declined to comment to a reporter.

Cecilia Cardoza, 92, who has lived in the neighborhood since 1952, said she could remember nothing like Sunday's incident.

While she didn't know Griffiths, she knows members of her family and extended her sympathies to them.

"I feel terrible; they are a lovely family," Cardoza said.

Christine Williams, 50, who lives on nearby Sheridan Street, offered her condolences to the family and police.

"It's tragic; it's unfortunate. It's a sad situation," she said.

Several residents who spoke declined to give their names, including one man who denounced the police response as "overkill."

His wife acknowledged that police faced an unknown and potentially volatile situation. But she questioned the amount of force used. By her count, the response drew at least 35 police cruisers to her street.

"We do think it was a bit of an overkill kind of thing," she said. "I'm still concerned about that shot."

Slovin, whose family has lived in Easton 15 years, compared what happened Sunday to a movie scene.

Slovin is supportive of the police who were involved and said that her thoughts have also been with Griffiths and her family.

But the experience remains troubling, she said.

"It's definitely hard to see it play out. There is a reality of seeing it happening in front of your house, and then watching it on TV," Slovin said. "It's just very unsettling."
